THE HISTORY OF THE UEFA CUP

Their idea was to organise a tournament for representative sides from cities in Europe that regularly organised trade fairs. The concept was agreed upon and the forerunner to the UEFA Cup, namely the Inter-Cities Fairs Cup was founded on 18 April 1955, two weeks after the founding of the European Champion Clubs' Cup.

The first Fairs Cup involved teams from Barcelona, Basle, Birmingham, Copenhagen, Frankfurt, Lausanne, Leipzig, London, Milan and Zagreb. Originally conceived as a two-year tournament, it lasted for three, during which time 23 games were played. Barcelona, using players purely from FC Barcelona, beat a London representative side 8-2 on aggregate in the final.

For the second tournament the organisers reverted to club participation with the knockout format continuing, but the teams still had to come from cities staging trade fairs. Sixteen clubs took part in the 1958-60 tournament, after which it was staged on an annual basis. By 1962 the number of entrants had risen to 32; there were 48 in 1967; 60 in 1968; and, as from the 1969-70 season, there were 64 teams on the starting grid. There are now more than 100.

In its early years teams from southern Europe, especially Spain, tended to dominate the Fairs Cup, most notably Barcelona, who won it three times, and Valencia CF who won it twice. In 1968 Leeds United AFC became the first northern European club to win the trophy, heralding a run of six successive wins by English clubs.

The fifth of these was the 1971/72 tournament, won by Tottenham Hotspur FC, and the first to be known as the UEFA Cup. The change of name was recognition of the fact that the competition had cast aside its ties with the international trade fairs, leaving UEFA as the only organisation with enough administrative and sporting know-how to run it.

Inter, Juventus and Liverpool share the record of three UEFA Cup final successes apiece. Real Madrid CF, Tottenham Hotspur FC, Parma AC, VfL Borussia Mönchengladbach, IFK Göteborg and Feyenoord have all won the competition twice.

Feyenoord's Paul Bosvelt receives the UEFA Cup trophy following his side's 3-2 defeat of BV Borussia Dortmund in the 2001/02 final
